I thank Phyllis G. Dennison out on the Temple Stream for putting up with my recitals of research defeats and triumphs. My fundamental indebtedness to source persons across this land is self-evident from cover to cover. May I also convey here my indebtedness to Jerry L. Russell, Editor and Publisher of the *C.H.I. "The Youngest Soldierboy" in North/South Trader May-June '77, much expanded, appears as "Youngest Soldierboys Among the Last." "Age Differentials of Spring-Winter Marriages," also in the Trader May-June '83 appears here as Appendix F. "Sarah F. Rockwell" appeared in the Aug. '74 U.D.C. Magazine; "The Old Dominion's Last Boys in Gray," since amply expanded, was in the Winter '81 Confederate Historical Institute Journal.

To Michael Cavanaugh, Editor of Civil War Book Exchange, in Philadelphia, who includes excerpts from my work for his key clearinghouse, I offer my thanks for raising reader consciousness in this field; and to David E. Roth, Editor of Blue & Gray Magazine, in Galloway, Ohio, I extend my appreciation for a vital presence in his most attractive Civil War showcase. Finally, I deeply appreciate how the Old Rebs have regained the higher eminence of Confederate Veteran magazine and how they are entrenched in Southern Partisan this first summer ('85) of their wide exposure.

On Jan. 1, 1903, the Whittons moved to Timpson. Here he became expert in estimating and measuring timber, particularly the ever more valuable longleaf pine, loblolly pine, and shortleaf pine of East Texas. Until he was ninety-three, he enjoyed a wide reputation for this skill. He said many times to his children, "Do not let criticism discourage you. The person who does worthwhile things will make some mistakes and be criticized." He often quoted Psalm 103, verses 1-6 and had his children memorize it. After his wife's death in July 1914 in a horse-and-buggy accident, his increased home obligations required him to cut back his regular work. Later on, being fond of the West, Mr. Whitton toured New Mexico, Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada and Utah with his son Benjamin. Again, in 1927 he bought a new Chevrolet and showed several of his children the wonders of the West. Of all sports squirrel hunting was perhaps his favorite, squirrel meat being always a choice item on his menu.

If we observe carefully, as he steps along before us now, we can just see his "VETERAN" badge, which tells us he made the trip to Gettysburg for that great reunion in 1938. During his last sixteen years W. N. Whitton took increased interest in the U.C.V. On June 7, 1940, at New Orleans he was made Captain and Aide de Camp on the Staff of Major-General L.N. Baugh, Cmdr. of the Texas Division, his commission being signed by Henry A. Miller, Ass't. Adj.-Gen. and Julius F. Howell, General Commanding. In 1949 he was commissioned an honorary colonel by the Confederate Stamp Alliance in recognition of his valiant service in the war. Beginning with his ninety-fifth birthday, the Whittons held a reunion annually to honor him. During his last nine years he lived with and prospered by the care of his youngest daughter, Hazel. These last years were filled with planting a hundred pecan trees and an orchard of peach, apple, pear and plum trees. Each year, too, he raised vegetables, his hobby from childhood. Every memorial Day he represented the Boys in Gray by placing a beautiful magnolia wreath to their sacred honor in City Park. He was still doing this in May 1948. A November 1948 bout with pneumonia began his decline. Just after visiting his orchard on Washington's Birthday 1949, he peacefully passed away at 102 years 8 months and 19 days. How could he have been a finer American citizen?

William Jasper Brown

Feb. 26, 1846—Mar. 2, 1949

Old Jasper Brown was among Georgia's final Gray triumvirate. Close to the soil his livelong days, he, like his poor farming folks, eked out a modest living from gainless agriculture. He was the younger son of the Joseph (Manning) Browns, whose dwelling place was between Aaron Station and Garfield, Emanuel County, Georgia. There he grew up to become a tall, tough, blue-eyed lad. While Jasper helped keep the farm going, his brother

Jim went to the Civil War first. Though details of his own war record are elusive, Brown was a full eighteen when he served eight months with a Georgia infantry unit during 1864-65.

Lewis Boatright, an octogenarian living near Garfield, Georgia, shares these Jan. 21, 1974 thoughts on his old friend—

Mr. Brown lived on his small farm near my home during 1880-1918, and my folks and me were neighbors nigh on fifty years, all told. He grew cotton, corn, hogs, cows, and vegetables for his own use mainly. His wife died about 1897. He liked to be of service to his friends. . . had a beautiful gray horse and a buggy he enjoyed. He'd talk on his Confederate Army experiences some. In spare time he'd fish in the creek by his farm. Poor Mr. Brown lost his farm to his doctor friend when he was not able to pay his bills.

I remember him as an independent, honest, upright gentleman whose desire was for a better state and nation for future young folks to enjoy. Good old Jasper hoped for a life after death where there would be no wars, tears, sorrows nor trials.

Mrs. Leroy Stapleton of Metter, Georgia, recalls Mar. 7, 1973:

Our friend, Wm. J. Brown, joined Lake Primitive Baptist Church (2 miles E. of Metter) in June 1936 during their big meeting. He was baptized in the heated church pool as he was too old to be baptized in 15-Mile Creek that runs behind Lake Church. He was honored in April 1937 in Statesboro when he was 91 by citizens of Bulloch Co. His wife was Matilda Williams and they had a daughter, Nan, I believe, who died in the late 1930s. After losing his own place, he moved into the little home of the J.M. Rooks, Rt. 2, Summit. Her father was brother to Wm. Jasper. Her Uncle Jasper was quite a character. He prevailed upon the Rooks to move an old car (that wouldn't run) to a favorite spot of his. Lazy afternoons he'd go out to sit in it and bask by the hour. . . managing at times a trifle of liquid nourishment for his quiet ride in the sun.

Finally (and modestly) in her Apr. 26, 1973 response, Mrs. J. M. Rooks of Metter offers—

I knew Uncle Jasper about thirty years, I guess. Being tenant farmers on a sandy knoll, our dwelling was hardly a rest home worthy one of Dixie's old heroes. I kept him thirteen years, the last four of which he was about helpless and bedfast. His low-ceiling room was unheated and a kerosene lamp was our only lighting at Summit, Ga. in those days. I wish we could have done better by him, but we didn't have the means. I cooked soups and fed him by spoon. Like my husband, J. M., said at the time—"We are proud we did all our means let us, but now we just don't have what it takes to put him away the way he deserves. We've appealed to the welfare so he won't go to a pauper's grave, but no one has told us he'll get a decent funeral."

Mrs. Rooks, the equal of a practical nurse, kept her home and her patient's bedding spotless. By late January 1949 the plight of the Rooks was discovered when V. E. Durden of nearby Graymont wrote "City Beat," a column in Savannah Morning News—"Could some person lend Mr. Brown a comfortable wheelchair, for his last days certainly aren't many." Oglethorpe

Sanitarium quickly donated the chair via a group of marines who may well recall the rural vignette they were a part of that Saturday, Feb. 26th. Though Mrs. Rooks was in a hospital from overwork, the arriving marines were given a warm welcome by Mr. Rooks. As he led them to Brown's bedside, sunlight pierced into the little antechamber between wide boards. The Confederate flag covering his headboard had its own story. The Rev. F. H. Sills, Candler Co. legislator, and civic groups had responded in 1941 when they learned of Brown's request for it. Sills would remember the day he presented this flag. "There were big tears in his eyes when I gave it to him. He was blind then, but he rubbed his hands over the folds and said, 'I marched many a mile under this flag.' " And now eight years later the old warrior lay beneath Dixie's colors, too weak to lift his head. As the marines brought him the wheelchair, he was blinking and whispering "Tell them I thank them." While they stood by his bedside, a marine asked Brown if they could do something for him. Hoarsely he spoke, "Give me a drink."—whereupon, Mr. Rooks noted that Brown didn't mean water. Swiftly the marines invaded a country mile, reconnoitered a store, captured two bottles of wine, and retreated to their new-found comrade's bedside. This being his 103rd birthday, Old Reb Brown, all gratitude, took several sips as Mr. Rooks held a bottle. With surprising strength he raised from his pillow to give his company a smiling salute.

When these Savannah members of Co. D, 10th Inf. Battn., Marine Corps Reserve, learned that Brown would be carried to a pauper's grave, they promised this would never be. They organized fund-raising in Savannah. One marine, insisting he remain unknown, donated a $500 casket. Wm. Jasper Brown clung to life those last four days beyond his birthday, just time enough to raise the funds. Some 500 people came to his funeral; it was then noted he had been "among loved ones where he had wished to be." The marine detachment gave him full military honors and nine S.C.V.'s of Camp No. 93 were on hand. After all expenses were paid, poetic justice won out when Mrs. Rooks was presented the surplus, "a token of Appreciation for her excellent care of the old veteran during his invalidism."

Aaron Scales Cockerham

Oct. 9, 1848—Apr. 1, 1949

In a remote mountainous section of North Carolina's Mitchell River Valley there still lived in the late 1940s an old Boy in Gray. He had always lived in Surry County where Mitchell River, rising in Allegheny County, flows east until it enters Yadkin River. Near their confluence just outside Mount Airy, Aaron Cockerham, one of the most self-sustaining and freedom-loving men who ever lived (and he knew how to), rivaled and outdid the famed Henry David Thoreau for his very harmony with and closeness to nature.
